Malaxa's immigration status.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service has not withdrawn its report of 26 September 1952, and still stands on record as recommending that Nicolae Malaxa's application to become a permanent resident should be granted.

On the other hand, Malaxa could bypass Congress and get the status of permanent resident in two other possible ways:

1) On the Rumanian preferential quota. (His daughter, Irina Pallade, is a permanent resident)

2) On the basis of the new Immigration law, which creates a special regime for highly qualified technicians.
